

A Renegade Poet and Other Essays (Classic Reprint)

Excerpt from A Renegade Poet and Other Essays
In a London hospital, in November, 1907, there died a man of the rarest genius, whom sorrow had marked for her own from His earliest years. His work was accomplished, and naught remained for him in life. For the past few years he had intellectually ceased to be, and the main enduring product of his labors had appeared during the four years preceding 1897. This man was Francis Thompson, who, like Lamb, was called by sorrow and anguish and a strange desolation of hopes into quietness, and a soul set apart and made peculiar to God.
