

Eathon (The Masons 2 of 2)

Eathon is the second son of Stuart Mason from The first of the six series novels of the Masons, The Storyteller. Eathon and two Indian companions leave Florida and go west in search of the Big River (The Mississippi) and along the way they have to battle a hunting party of a hostile tribe of Indians well out numbered and came out triumphant. After finding the Mississippi, where New Orleans stands today. Eathon found two friendly Indian tribes living on the river, one on each side. Eathon became their friends, hero and ally in battling a tribe from up river. Eathon meets the love of his life, the daughter of a Frenchman living with the tribe across the river. He decides to build a ship from his fathers description and the Frenchman. After its completion, Eathon along with his two Indian companions and a selected few from each tribe of his new found friends sails the crud ship that looks more like a large floating log cabin than a ship to back Florida to be married in the same church as his mother and father. They encounter more hostile Indians along the way, but were successful in fighting them off. The wadding party encounters Captain Sabo, Eathons fathers and grandfathers enemy. Altercation took place and the local authorities stepped in but not until most of the Sabos were put down. On the cover I see a crude ship. What I mean by crud is that it is a large floating log cabin. The hull is made of logs as is the pilothouse is made of logs. I see the ship sailing along the coastline with a lot of canoes with several Indians in each chasing after the ship shooting arrows at it. On deck is a tall man with a young lady standing next to him. He is shooting his rifle at the oncoming Indians as the young lady was reloading a handgun. In addition to the tall man with a young lady are a small man with graying hair and a goatee and a half dozen Indians also shooting their weapons such as bows and arrows and spears at the oncoming
