Fenella believes in love. She sacrificed her career to be available as a companion for Gordon her lover, spending the time he is not around in turning their house in a beautiful love nest. Otherwise she lived the life of a successful financiers mistress, enhancing his life with her charm and beauty as she travelled the world with him and acted as a hostess to his business friends at their home In London. When his wife, desperate to regain her husband, takes up residence in the same road, Gordon finds his love life becoming more and more awkward so he ditches Fenella. Now she needs to earn her own living, to gain qualifications for office work, Fenella tries to enrol at a local tutorial college. To her consternation, her erstwhile companion, opposes her attendance. Gordons wife, Virginia plans to send one of their twin sons to the same tutorial. Wanting to consolidate his respectable City position, as head of Cloisters Trust, newly ennobled Sir Gordon Patterson now also wishes to remove Fenella from the house they shared for fifteen years in Londons fashionable Fulham, where she loves to live. When the Patersons twin sons reek havoc in her home whilst recovering their fathers possessions, to the delight of the tabloid press, Fenella retaliates. Inspired by Chloe, a journalist friend and neighbour, she finds quotable and photogenic ways of making things unpleasant for her erstwhile lover. Other friends and neighbours, however who previously recognised Gordon and Fenella an item, when forced to take sides, desert her. As her debts mount and she embarks on a precarious love affair, shocking lthe respectable local community further, Fenella fears she is destined for the gutter Only her warmth and charm enable her to make new friends and rediscover some old acquaintance made in her glamorous life as a devoted mistress, such as Fujio the important Japanese businessman and his elegant wife Kiku.

Now Fenella finds her new impoverished world is as full of the colourful characters that abounded in turn of the century London, such as Patrick the charming intelligent itinerant Irishman who's spent time in prison for minor fraud, Charlie Gregg, the gentleman alcoholic beggar and Winky the bridge player who gambles away his home. As she works for Business Studies A level, Fenella finds the rich can be as villainous as the poor. During her project working at Sir Gordons firm, Cloisters Trust in the City of London, Fenella discovers that her erstwhile lovers dealings at Cloisters Trust, have not been as honest as she had previously believed. The more she uncovers, the more she sees how shady, though apparently legal, some investments may be. This knowledge changes her destiny as she befriends a knowledgeable girl analyst sacked from Cloisters Trust. Now in a position to undermine Gordons reputation, Fenella has to decide whether this is what she really wants. Will a scandal attached to him rebound on her? Can she too move on from her love of Gordon? Though three men had fallen in love with her, can Fenella convince Gordon and herself that another man has taken his place and that she had achieved the sweetest revenge of all?
