

The Policy of the Young Negro (Classic Reprint)

Excerpt from The Policy of the Young Negro
In all parts of the world today principally with undeveloped races there is a ceaseless state of unrest. And this apparent restlessness seems bedded chiefly in the blood and fibre of the young. All classes or our reading public have been watching with unabated interest the rising tide of dissatisfaction among the Balkan states of Europe. They are also appraised of the portentous awakenings of the young blood in China, Japan and Korea. In Haiti and Cuba yet lie the smouldering fuses of rebellion and disturbance, and even in Egypt and in India the spirit of progress and aggression runs rife in the rising generations; so that practically in all corners of the earth, there seem to be certain manifestations of unrest and a desire for supposedly better things in government and society possessing the people.
